

5 Things Every Nonprofit Should Know About Applying for an Impact100 SRQ Grant

It's Not Who You Know at Impact100 SRQ!

It's about the quality of your application, how well you describe your initiative and how it will make a difference in our community. Hundreds of Impact100 SRQ members serve on our review committees and participate in our impartial review process. Every grant application is viewed on its own merit and any reviewer's bias is disclosed and managed accordingly.

Hundreds of Impact100 SRQ Members Are Exposed to and Educated About Your Nonprofit's Mission Every Year

Even if you are not selected as a current year grant award finalist or recipient, many Impact100 SRQ members learn about your mission and programs for the first time through the application review process. This can lead to bringing new supporters – and potential donors – to your organization.

Site Visits Are a Key Component of The Review Process

Our Impact100 SRQ members relish the opportunity to have in-person exposure to our potential grant recipients. It enhances their understanding of your mission and programs and increases their knowledge of the various needs in our community.

Grant Award Recipients Benefit From 24 Months of Opportunities for Additional Support From Our Members

During this period, through a program called Impact In Action, we encourage nonprofits to offer Impact100 SRQ members multiple opportunities to share their time, treasure, and talent to support initiatives they have invested in.

We Offer Tools and Trainings for the Grant Application Process

Impact100 SRQ hosts information sessions and workshops for nonprofits to learn more about our model and mission, grant cycles, and application process. It is our goal to help all nonprofits in Sarasota and Manatee Counties know about us and have access to the tools necessary to submit the best application possible.
